Death in the World, but Life in Christ.

Josue Ramirez

It was a whole series of songs: hard rock songs, as they call it. They had been recorded by a youth group called "Death," and were coming out of a small tape recorder. Some titles, among others, included: "Left for Dead", "Born to Die", "Suicide is Beautiful", and "Disconnect the Plug".

But these songs were not played in a disco or ballroom, they sounded out in a forest in the state of Washington, United States. And the recorder was next to the corpse of a young man, beaten to death. His murderers, young like him, had left the music playing while he was still alive, perhaps to add more agony to the experience of death.

The youth music is infused with the word "death." It seems that there is an obsession among young people for death, suicide, the grave, the coffin, and everything that refers to the end of life. Swallows are no longer sung about, or butterflies, or flowers or wheat fields. Death is the favorite subject of today's youth. It should not surprise us, then, that there is a death psychosis in the youthful environment, and a gloomy pessimism in his songs. And worst when you see this influence in the video social media that somehow overpass some filters that teens or under can watched and be influenced by it.

What is the reason for this condition that is so common in the youth of all countries? There are several factors. First, two major world wars, and a series of local wars, have spread the word "death" everywhere. Secondly, the spread of materialistic and atheistic ideas, which can never give hope to a disoriented youth, has contaminated all of our youth.

Third, the dreadful consumption of drugs of any kind legalize or not, which kill the delicate brain cells and the noblest feelings and thoughts of the human being, has left our youth lifeless. And fourth, the failure of religious leaders, who are no longer an inspiration to anyone and are no longer spiritual guides, has disappointed teens. Since the religious world can be obscured by the evil influence among the "christians".

However, in the midst of such a gloomy picture, there is always hope. There is always hope in Jesus Christ, the living, triumphant, just, and kind Lord. Christ changes death into life, and despair into hope. He gives new life where everything has been lost. So every young person can taste the grace of God. You don't have to despair. In Christ there is life, life to spare. Just need to follow Him through out His words, listen and obey His commands then you find life, eternal life.
