Sometimes the Lion Really Is as He Is Painted
Josue Ramirez

It is said that a poor widow, who had an eight-year-old son, owed money to a greedy moneylender who came every week to collect from her. For the unfortunate woman, paying that debt became more difficult with each passing week. One day the moneylender entered her house, grabbed the poor woman by the hair, and began beating her while the frightened little boy trembled with fear in a corner of the room, helplessly watching the scene.

The years passed, and that young boy made good use of them by developing the talent God had given him. He studied drawing and painting and became a well-known artist in the city. One day, remembering that dreadful scene from his childhood, the young man painted on canvas the usurer who had beaten his mother. The scene was real, vivid, unmistakable; the figures were rendered with masterful skill. For that painting, undoubtedly one of his finest works because he had carried it in his soul long before placing it on canvas, he set a price far higher than for any of his other paintings. Did it not represent how much it had cost his mother to raise him?

What a shock it must have been for the moneylender when he passed by the gallery where those works of art were displayed and saw himself faithfully portrayed in that repulsive act! Ashamed, he instructed one of his employees to purchase the costly painting. As soon as it was in his hands, he tore it to pieces and threw it into the flames, trying in this way to destroy the cry of his conscience.

When the young painter learned what had happened, he took the money to his mother and said, "That wicked man bought his own image in order to destroy it, but he will never be able to erase the one that has been engraved in my eyes since childhood!"

Today there are many who deal with their sin in the same way that moneylender dealt with his. They mistreat God by their words and by their conduct and then try to buy Him off with their good deeds and charitable gifts. Some who have the means even give large sums of money to the church in an effort to silence the voice of their conscience, as though that were the currency with which the debt of sin could be paid. Do they not understand that the only payment that can settle that account is the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who gave His life for us?

Christ paid the high price of our redemption so that we would not have to pay it ourselves. Therefore, the only way to be freed from our sins is to confess them to God, repent, and seek His forgiveness through baptism. That is all we must do for Him to forgive us and wipe away all the sins that appear on the canvas that represent our past life.
